PREFACE TO VOLUME V.

THIS volume contains the words beginning with the letters H, I, J, K. Including the Main words, to which separate articles are allotted, the special Combinations or compounds, explained and illustrated under the Main words, and the Subordinate entries of obsolete and variant forms entered in their alphabetical places, with a reference to the Main words under which they are treated and illustrated, the number of words amounts to 32,700. The Combinations of simple and obvious meaning, of which lists are given under the Main words, without further explanation, but in most cases with illustrative quotations, number 4,318 more, raising the actual total of words treated in the volume to 37,018

These words are thus distributed among the four letters:

	Main words	Subordinate words	Special Combinations	Obvious Combinations	Total [1]
H (516 pages)	8,900	2,145	2,260	2,708	16,013
I (630 ,,)	11,350	1,636	683	778	14,447
J (116 ,,)	1,727	402	441	419	2,989
K (112 ,,)	1,577	1,084	495	413	3,569
Total	23,554	5,267	3,879	4,318	37,018

Considered as to their status in the language, the Main words are distinguished approximately into those native or fully naturalized, and still current, those now obsolete (marked †), and those considered as alien or imperfectly naturalized (marked ‖). The distribution of the Main words is as follows.

	Current	Obsolete	Alien	Total [2]
H	7,061	1,463	376	8,900
I	7,847	3,333	170	11,350
J	1,361	280	86	1,727
K	1,098	267	212	1,577
Total	17,367	5,343	844	23,554

The differing proportions of the various classes of words here tabulated reflect the different parts played by H, I, J, and K, as initial letters in English H is, on the whole, a normal letter, containing the usual proportion of old words, Old English and French, with additions from all the sources that normally contribute to the English vocabulary, none of these being in excess, unless, perhaps, the modern learned words from Greek; it contains no Latin prefix. I, on the other hand, containing the words formed with the Latin prefixes in- (il-, im-, ir-), inter-, intra-, intro-, is preponderatingly Latinic. Hence, whereas in the Bosworth-Toller Anglo-Saxon Dictionary H occupies five times as many pages as I, in the modern English dictionary I requires rather more pages than H. But few of these Latinic words are old enough in the language to have sustained any phonetic or even orthographic change, and few of them are of the kind (simple substantives) that readily form compounds, hence, the number of variant forms requiring to be registered as 'subordinate words', and especially of 'combinations', is small in proportion to the whole. On the other hand a great number of the words that have been at various times derived or formed from Latin, have failed to become permanent constituents of the language, they have again gone out of use, hence, the 'obsolete words' in I are disproportionately numerous. J and K are imperfect letters, more than half the words which would belong to them phonetically, are actually spelt with G and C, hence they are lexicographically among the small letters. Also, they were not properly Old English letters; but J contains old words from or through French, while K was substituted in early Middle English for Old English C 'hard' before e, i (y) and n The proportion of 'combinations' in J and K is somewhat normal, as is also that of 'subordinate words' in J; but in K, owing to so many C words having variants in K, the proportion of 'subordinate words' is enormously large, three times as great as in H and J, and five times as great as in I. Both letters contain a very large number of words adopted from Oriental, African, American, Australian, and Oceanic languages (these being phonetically usually written with J and K, in preference to G and C); hence, the 'alien words' in J are proportionally thrice as many as in I, and one-fourth more than in H; and in K three-and-a-half times as many as in H, and seven times as many as in I. In those pages of K which contain the non-English initial combinations Ka-, Kh-, Kl-, Ko-, Kr-, Ku-, Ky-, these exotic words may be thought to superabound, yet it would have been easy to double their number, if every such word occurring in English books, or current in the English of colonies and dependencies, had been admitted; our constant effort has been to keep down, rather than to exaggerate, this part of 'the white man's burden.'

Many workers have contributed to the production of this volume. In addition to the volunteer Readers, by whom so many of the quotations have been collected, and of whom the chief have been mentioned in Vol. I, the services have to be recorded of Mr S. Taylor, of the White House, Crossings, Chapel-en-le-Frith, who at an early period arranged the materials for HO- alphabetically and chronologically, and of Mr. A. W. Longden, of Hook Green, Marple, Stockport, who did the same for those of HU- and HY-. The sub-editing of HA- was undertaken by the late Mr. G. A. Schrumpf, who, however, at his death, had only partially put the quotations in order as far as Har-. A portion of HE-, including Head and its derivatives, was arranged by Mr. H M. Fitz-Gibbon, of 49 Merrion Square, Dublin. The materials for HI- were skilfully sub-edited by Dr R J Lloyd, of Liverpool, parts of HO- and HY-, Hoo- to Horus, Hyp- to Hyz-, by the late Mr John Peto, another part of HO-, Hos- to Hoz-, and the whole of HU- by the late Mr. W Noel Woods, B A, and Mrs. Woods, part of HY- to Hym-, by Miss M. Quick, Clifton. The whole of the rest of the materials (with the exception of the pronominal words) were sub-edited between 1883 and 1890, by E. L. Brandreth, Esq, Member of Council of the Philological Society, who subsequently also (1895–8) revised and re-subedited the greater part of the letter. For preliminary assistance with I we are indebted mainly to the indefatigable labours of Miss J E A Brown, of Further Barton, near Cirencester, and to the Rev. Canon Rupert Morris, D D., the former having sub-edited most of the materials as far as the end of Into, the latter the remainder from Intra onward. A section from Inconcealable to Indiscriminate was prepared by the Rev. E. H. Sugden, now Master of Queen's College in the University of Melbourne, before he left England in 1887, and a small portion by Mr T Wilson, of Rivers Lodge, Harpenden. The whole of the letter I was subsequently revised, with incorporation of new quotations, by Miss Brown, whose work at the materials for this letter thus extended from 1887 to 1900. The materials for J were, at an early stage (1882–6), arranged by the late Rev Walter Gregor, D D, of Pitsligo, the whole was subsequently (1896–9) sub-edited, with much addition of material and investigation of difficult points, by the Rev. C. B. Mount, M A, Oxford. The materials for K were originally put in order for the Philological Society by Mr. H. Hucks Gibbs, now Lord Aldenham; they have been sub-edited for us during 1892–3, and again in 1899–1900, with great research into the literary history of the Oriental words, by Mr Brandreth. No fewer than five of these excellent helpers have passed away without seeing the printed sheets of any portion of the letters at which they worked; of their esteemed services, as of those of the survivors above-named, and especially of those of Mr. Brandreth, Miss J. E. A. Brown, and Mr. Mount, whose assistance has been so continuous and so effective, the heartiest acknowledgement is now made.

In the proof stage we have again to record the help of (alas! that it should be necessary so to describe him) the late Fitzedward Hall, D C L, of Marlesford, Wickham Market. This help was continued till within a few weeks of his death, which took place on February 1, 1901, at the age of seventy-six. We have had in every volume to record the supremely valuable services gratuitously rendered to the Dictionary by this eminent English scholar, who, as a pure labour of love, for many years devoted several hours every day to the examination of our proofs, in order to make additions to them from his enormous collections of notes on English words, phrases, and idioms, containing quotations from, or references to, thousands of books of the last four centuries. To the Dictionary his death is an incalculable loss, a loss that would indeed have been irreparable but for the fact that he left directions that all his MS. quotations, references, notes, and memoranda, should be handed over to the Editor, and that we should have the free use of the books in his own extensive library to which these referred. We have accordingly begun, with the assistance of many willing hands, to have the quotations indicated in his reference-lists excerpted, put upon slips, and added to our materials, so that the Dictionary may continue in some measure to profit by his researches, although at the cost of much time and labour which during his lifetime he himself bestowed. Hearty acknowledgement is made of the way in which Mr. Richard D. Hall has done everything to facilitate this completion of his honoured father's services to the Dictionary and to English lexicography.

Second only to the contributions of Dr. Fitzedward Hall, in enhancing our illustration of the literary history of individual words, phrases, and constructions, have been those of Dr. W C. Minor, received week by week for words at which we were actually working. For other help in the proof stage we have to thank the Right Hon Lord Aldenham; the Rev Canon Fowler, of Durham; the late Mr Russell Martineau, M A (down to his lamented death in December, 1898); the Rev J B Johnston, B D, Falkirk, Monsieur F J Amours, Glasgow; Mr. A. Caland, Wageningen, Holland, and especially Miss Edith and Miss E. P Thompson, now of Lansdowne, Bath, and Mr. R. Jowitt Whitwell, of Oxford, whose researches, both in the Bodleian Library and at the Public Record Office, have added much to our illustration of the history of legal and historical terms. Grateful acknowledgement is also made of the etymological assistance rendered by Professor Eduard Sievers, of Leipzig, and by M Paul Meyer, Member of the Institute of France, as also, in particular words, of that of Professors Napier, J. Wright, Bywater, Robinson Ellis, Driver, Margoliouth, Morfill, and Rhŷs, of Oxford; Professors Kluge and Schroer (Freiburg-im-Breisgau), Luick (Graz), Morsbach (Gottingen); Dr J. W. Muller, Leyden, of Mr. J. T. Platts, M.A. with Persian and Indian words, and of Professor Bullock with Chinese words; and especially, in J and K, of Mr James Platt, junior, of 77 St. Martin's Lane, London, whose researches have enabled us to give the exact history of many words from far-off languages. The friends who have helped in the treatment or investigation of the history of historical, legal, philosophical, scientific, and technical words in this volume are too numerous to mention, most of them have already been named in earlier prefaces; but particular mention must here be made of the help of Mr. R E Baynes, M.A.; Rev Andrew Clark, M A., Mr W. A Clarke, F L S, Mr C. H. Firth, M A, LL D, Mr. W. W. Fisher, M.A; Professor Gotch, F R S., Mr. Horace Hart, M A., Mr R R. Marett, M A, Professor H. A. Miers, M A, Professor Odling, F.R.S., Sir Frederick Pollock, D C L; Mr G F. Stout, M A.; Mr V. H Veley, F R S, Mr C C. J. Webb, M A, Professor J Cook Wilson, and the late Sir John Stainer, of Oxford, of Professor Alfred Newton, the Rev. Professor Skeat, and Dr W Aldis Wright, Cambridge; Mr. W. W. Dobell, Dr. F. J Furnivall, Mr James Hammond, Dr J. A Kingdon, London, Dr. S R. Gardiner, the Deputy-Keeper of the Public Records; the Director of the Royal Gardens, Kew, the Director of the Natural History Museum, South Kensington, the Secretary of the Zoological Society, Mr Barclay V. Head and Mr. E. J Scott, of the British Museum; Mr. E. W. Hulme, of H M Patent Office; also of Sir J S Burdon-Sanderson and Dr W. Sykes, F S A, of Woking, with the history of medical terms, of Professor J K. Laughton and Mr M Oppenheim, with the history of naval terms, of Professor Albert H. Chester, of New Brunswick, N.J., with names of minerals, and of Mr. Albert Matthews, of Boston, U.S, with the history of many American uses of words, especially during the Colonial period.

The Assistants in the Scriptorium, who have been engaged on this volume, are Messrs C G Balk, A. T. Maling, M A.; F J. Sweatman, M.A.; A R. Sewell, and H. Price. On parts of the work earlier or later, there have also been engaged Messrs C. T. Onions, M A, A H Mann, B A, E J. Thomas, B A, and Miss Hilda Murray. Mr. Alfred Erlebach, B A, a valued member of the Scriptorium staff in earlier times, who continued to render occasional assistance, died on October 7, 1899 In the latter half of this volume I have also had the collaboration of Mr. W A. Craigie, M A., who has taken a large share in the preparation of K, especially of the etymological articles, and has now been entrusted with the preparation of volume VIII

H.

H (ēɪtʃ), the eighth letter of the Roman alphabet, ancient and modern, representing historically the Semitic Ḥ, Ḥeth or Ḥaṯh, through the Greek H, Ḥeta, Eta, originally the eighth, but, in the later Greek alphabet, after the omission of ϝ (see F), the seventh letter. The Semitic letter represented a laryngal or guttural spirant, or a rough aspirate, and it was with the aspirate value that the letter was originally used in Greek and passed thence into Roman use. (In the later Greek alphabet, H was used as a vowel, to express long ē, which had previously not been distinguished from short e: see E.) When the Roman alphabet was applied to the Germanic languages, H was used initially for the similar aspirate or breath sound, which had arisen out of a pre Germanic or Aryan k, through the stages of guttural aspirate (kh), and guttural spirant (χ), medially and finally h was put for the guttural spirant itself, which, in later times, came to be written gh or ch thus, Gothic haiḥ, OHG hōh, OE hēah, mod English high (gh mute), Scotch heich. In Old English, h occurred not only before the vowels, but also before the consonants l, n, r, w (representing the pre Germanic kl, kn-, kr-, kw-, or gl-), as in hlāf loaf, hnecca neck, hræfn raven, hwā who, it now stands initially only before vowels. Its power is that of a simple aspiration or breathing, with just sufficient narrowing of the glottis to be audible before a vowel. It is also used to form consonantal digraphs (sh, th, etc.) with simple sounds; and it is often silent, or merely lengthens a preceding vowel.

The name aitch, which is now so remote from any connexion with the sound, goes back through ME ache to OF ache = Sp ache, It acca, pointing to a late L accha, akkha, or aha*, exemplifying the sound, cf. It effe, elle, emme, etc. (The earlier L name was ha.) The plural occurs as aitches, aches, hs, h's.

In late Latin, and in the Romance languages, the aspirate was no longer pronounced, and consequently often not written, in modern Italian it is entirely omitted, as in eretico, istorico, orribile. In Old French simil arly the mute h was originally not written, and it was in this form that many Old French words, such as abit, abīe, air, erbe, eritage, anest, onor or onur, ure or oure, ymne, were originally adopted in English. From this stage we derive the still existing forms abīt, abitēy, arbour (herbere), estler. But at a later period, imitation of the Latin spelling, by scribes who knew that language, gradually led to the restitution of h in the writing of most of these words in French, and thence also in English. In French the h, though thus artificially reinstated in spelling, remained mute, but in England it was gradually, after the usage of the native words, restored in pronunciation, so that at the present day only a very few words, viz herr, honest, honour, hour, with their derivatives, remain with h mute, though others, such as herb, humble, humour, were so treated very recently, and are by some people still, and hostler (also spelt ostler) is so pronounced by the majority. A trace of the former muteness or weakness of h in other words is also seen in the still prevalent practice of using an before words with initial h, not accented on the first syllable, as hereto(re), historical, humane, hypothenuse, and in such archaic forms as 'mine host', and the biblical 'an Hebrew'. In the ME. period, during which h was being gradually reinstated in words from Old French, these show great variety of spelling, the same word appearing now with, and now without h, thus uncertainty reacted upon other words beginning with a vowel, so that these also often received an initial h (due probably in some instances, as habundant, to a mistaken notion of their etymology). This spelling has been permanently established in the words hermit and hostage, among others.

In Old English, as in the Teutonic languages generally, initial h was strongly and distinctly aspirated. But early in the Middle English period it was dropped in pronunciation and writing before l, n, and r. The old hw was from the 12th c. commonly written wh sometimes so only, in Scotch quh, qwh, indicating a variety of pronunciation (see W). Before vowels, in words of Old English or Norse origin, h has been regularly retained in the standard spelling and pronunciation but in many English dialects, especially those of the mid and southern counties (not in Scotland, Ireland, or the United States), the aspirate has disappeared as in ordinary etymological element, and is now employed only with other functions, viz to avoid hiatus (e.g. the egg, pronounced the h egg), and especially in the emphatic or energetic utterance of a syllable with an initial vowel, being then prefixed without distinction to words with or without etymological h, thus horse, ass, usually ess, iss, emphatic illy (or after a vowel) hiss, hiss. In earlier periods, the dialectal habit naturally affected the written language of literature, where their influence was reinforced by the uncertainty that prevailed as to initial h in words of French and Latin. So that during the Middle English period, and down to the 17th c., we find numerous instances of the non etymological absence or (more often) presence of initial h in native words also. In exchange for the misapplied h prefixed to English some modern Dutch and Flemish dialects, especially those of Zealand, Flanders, and North Brabant, have retained the etymological h, and commonly employ it to avoid hiatus, and to impart emphasis, exactly like the English dialects, while in Old High German, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and, above all, Middle Flemish literature, the non etymological absence and presence of initial h is even more marked than in Middle English. In this Dictionary, some of the chief forms found in earlier use with adventitious initial h are mentioned in their alphabetical order, with a reference to their proper spelling, especially when this is not seen by simple omission of the h, but in other cases it is to be presumed that, when a ME word in h is not entered here, it will be found in the form without h.

In recent times, the correct treatment of initial h in speech has come to be regarded as a kind of shibboleth of social position, this has resulted in the cultivation of the educated usage in many quarters where it is not native. But even in educated pronunciation, there are cases in which h is usually mute, e.g. at the beginning of a syllable after certain consonant groups, as in exhaust, exhortation, and in such suffixes as ham, hop, in Chatham, Clapham, Durham, Greenhope, Stanhope, Thirlspot, Aerd in Shepherd, as well as in the pronouns he, his, him, her, when unemphatic, and as it were enclitically combined with the preceding word, as in I met him on his horse. In the corresponding neuter pronoun it, originally hit, in which the unemphatic use predominates, the h was long no dropped in writing as well as speech. (But in Scotch the emphatic form is still hit.)

After a vowel, h is regularly silent, and such a vowel being usually long as in oh, ah, bah, hurrah, the addition of h for usual in modern German) is one of the ways in which we have for indicating a long vowel in foreign or dialect words. The silence of h in certain positions contributed to the currency of such spellings as the obsolete prehaunnonce, prohme, abhominable.

By the combination of h with consonants, numerous digraphs are formed for the expression of simple sounds, the origin of this goes back to the ancient Greek alphabet, which used PH, TH, KH, for the aspirated consonants, which were afterwards provided with single symbols Φ, Θ, Χ, and sank into simple spirants. In Latin the digraphs were retained, and thence th, ch, and often tonally ph, were taken to represent German spirants or aspirates. In Old English, which had þ, ð, for the sound or sounds represented on the continent by th, these digraphs had little currency until after the Norman Conquest, when reintroduced. th, ch, gh, and sometimes ph, for certain English sounds, and substituted þ for OE ðw, the development of a simple sound (j) from the OE. combination sc, but through sch, as the digraph ch, ph and rh (pronounced f and r) were adopted from Latin as the representatives of Gr φ and ῥ, in more recent times bh has been used to express Slavonic and Semitic guttural spirants, bh, dh, gh, ph, th, kh, to represent Sanskrit and Indian aspirates, or other alien sounds, and sh (on the analogy of s : sh :: z : zh) for the phonetic representation of French j in déjeuner, symbolized in this Dictionary by ǯ (For the history and use of these digraphs, see under their respective initial letters, C, G, etc.)

To drop one's h's (or aitches), to omit initial h where it is pronounced in Standard English.

L habitus, noun of action (u- stem), from habēre to have, refl to be constituted, to be]

The sense development, as seen in Latin and the modern languages taken together, is thus refl Holding, having, 'havour', hence the way in which one holds or has oneself, i e. the mode or condition in which one is, exists, or exhibits oneself, a) externally, (a) as to personal appearance, fashion of body, mode of clothing oneself, dress, habitation, b) in mind, character, or life, hence, mental constitution, character, disposition, way of acting, comporting oneself, or dealing with things, habitual or customary way (of acting, etc.), personal custom, accustomedness This development was largely completed in ancient Latin, and had received some extension in OF, before the word became English. In our language, senses were taken, from time to time, from Fr or L., without reference to their original order of development, hence the chronological order in Eng is in no way parallel to the original, and the arrangement below is only partly chronological In mod F, the word is narrowed down to our branch I, other senses being supplied by habitude, thus Eng 'habit' is co-extensive with two French words, and its chief sense corresponds not to F. habit but to F. habitude.

+2 Half, preceded or followed by an ordinal numeral, was formerly used to express a half unit less than the corresponding cardinal number, thus OE. healfa hundtig half, thridde half or half thridde = two and a half Obs

This is an ancient Teutonic mode of reckoning of Ger anderthalb (= OE oðer he(fe) dridde healfe). In English this scarcely found after 1200. The expression is explained in quot 821 in elliptical form as half [and one] third [part] = two and a third [of one, contracted to dridda(n) teo(n)]. Hence the full sense, as was originally singular, dridda dæl gyldan two and a half bushels As in Old Saxon half was either declined as an adj (quot 850), or stood in the unin flected contracting form slaȝende, also with a sb., as half-halsed forehead, half-swarm, half-penny, half-troubled hemisphere In OTeut half appears to have been a later substitute for the original sâmi-, OE sam, as in OHG sâmiqui, OS sâmquic, OE samcwic half alive, so samhærnd half burnt, sambrice a half-breach, = L simi- in semidoctus, semivivus, semicoctus, semiustus, semihomo, etc. Cf. I In adverbial relation.

1 With adjectives and pa. ppples. Already in OE. see above. Very common in later use, esp. with pa. pples, to which half- may be prefixed wherever the sense suits. e.g. half-afraid, -amazed, -blind, -crazy, -deaf, -drunk, -fool, -human, -learned, -mad, -open, -raw, -ripe, -savage, -true, -half-armed, -ashamed, -bent, -buried, -cured, -disposed, -done, -dressed, -eaten, -educated, -finished, -formed, -hidden, -opened, -roasted, -ruined, etc., etc. With adjs expressing shape, it implies the form of half the figure, as half cordate, -cupshaped, -ovate

The two elements are often written separately when the adj. is in the predicate (see Half adv. 1), the use of the hyphen mostly implies a feeling of closer unity of notion in the compound attribute, as in half blind, half dressed, half saw, viewed as definite states, but it is often merely for greater syntactical perspicuity, on which ground it is regularly used when the adjective is attributive, thus I am half dead (or half-dead, with cold, a half-dead dog

4. A term applied, esp. in the English universities, to a building or buildings set apart for the residence or instruction of students, and, by transference, to the body of students occupying it.

a. Originally applied at Oxford and Cambridge to all residences of students, including the Colleges when these came to be founded. Now only Hist., arch., or poetic for 'academic buildings'.

At Cambridge this use survived till modern times, when some of the smaller colleges, though corporations, were still called halls: the older designation survives, for distinction's sake, in the name of Trinity Hall.

b. After the institution of the colleges, applied specifically to those buildings and societies which, unlike the colleges, were governed by a head only (and not by head and fellows), and whose property was held in trust for them, they not being bodies corporate. (Cf. College 4.)

The 'Halls' were originally very numerous, but in Queen Elizabeth's time only eight remained in Oxford, and they are now almost extinct.

c. In recent times applied to buildings in University towns, established, whether by the Universities or not, for the use of students in the higher learning, sometimes enjoying the privileges of the University and sometimes not; e.g. at Oxford private halls for the residence of undergraduate members of the University, under the charge of a member of Convocation; theological halls (e.g. Wycliffe Hall), halls for women students (e.g. Somerville Hall, Lady Margaret Hall).

For the last two classes the name 'college' has also been assumed: see College 4 c.

Handicap (hæ·ndikæp), sb [A word of obscure history Two examples of the sb, and one of the verb, are known in 17th c, its connexion with horse-racing appears in the 18th, its transferred general use, esp in the verb, since 1850 It appears to have originated in the phrase 'hand I' cap', or 'hand in the cap', with reference to the drawing mentioned in sense 1]

1 The name of a kind of sport having an element of chance in it, in which one person challenged some article belonging to another, for which he offered something of his own in exchange (Also fig)
On the challenge being entertained, an umpire was chosen to decree the difference of value between the two articles, and all three parties deposited forfeit money in a cap or hat The umpire then pronounced his award as to the 'boot or odds to be given with the inferior article, on hearing which the two other parties drew out full or empty hands to denote their acceptance or non acceptance of the match in terms of the award» If the two were found to agree in holding the award 'even' or 'off', the whole of the money deposited was taken by the umpire, but if not, by the party who was willing that the match should stand (See Notes & Queries 23 June 1883)
This sport is described under the name of New Fairy, in Pierce Plowman A v 172, B v 328, C xi 378, where 'Clement is cobelere caste of his clobe', for which 'Hikke be hakeneyman' wagered his hood, and 'Robyn þe ropere' was named for 'a noumpere', to ordain how much 'whoso haueth the hood shulde haue amendes of the cloke For reference to a similar sport in Scandinavia and Germany (where called Freymarkt), see Germania XIX (1874), Engel Mod V 150. A recent example occurs in R S Surtees 'Mr Sponge's Sporting Tour' ch xlv, in which the challenge is between a gold watch and a horse In later times the result became the subject of further betting on the part of the bystanders see The Sportsman 17 April 1897, 5/5.

(Such matches are recorded as early as 1680, but the term 'handicap' does not appear)
1754 Hoyle's Acc Cocker 128 xxxii, Rules concerning Racing in general, with a Description of a Post and Handy Cap Match A Bundy I to Match, is for A and C to put an equal Sum into a Hat, C who is to be Handy Capper, makes a Match for A and B which when perused by them, they put three Hands into their Pockets and draw them out closed, then they open them together, and if both have Money in their Hands, the Match is confirm'd, if neither have Money, it is no Match In both Cases the Hand-capper draws the Money out of the Hat, but if one has Money in his Hand, and the other none then it is no Match, and he that has the Money in his Hand is intitled to the Deposit in the Hat If a Match is made without the Weight being mentioned, each Horse must carry ten Stone 1762 Sir J Cullum's Rules of Racing Calendar 1826, and Blane Encycl Rural Sports ed 1832]

1862 Times 2 Jan, The most prolific source of mischief, perhaps, on the Turf, is the increase and magnitude of the handicaps. There is no beast so miserable, but that he may possibly succeed in a handicap 1887 Rules of Racing in J Ken Hist Brit Turf (1899) II 567 A 'handicap' is a race in which the weights which the horses are to carry are to be adjusted after the time limited for entering or naming, according to the handicapper's opinion of the merits of the horses, for the purpose of equalizing their chances of winning A free handicap is one in which no liability for stake or forfeit is incurred until acceptance, and no entry need be made

3 Any race or competition in which the chances of the competitors are sought to be equalized by giving an advantage to the less efficient or imposing a disadvantage upon the more efficient
Besides the method of weighting as in 2, this may be done in various ways, according to the nature of the game, as by requiring the superior competitor to accomplish a greater distance (e giving a start to the inferior), to do it in a shorter time, to play with fewer men or pieces, etc

Hang (hæŋ) v. Pa. t and pple hung (hŋ), hanged (hæŋd) Forms see below. The history of this word involves that of two OE and one ON verb, viz. OHG hengan, MHG., MDu hengen OF hōn ON and OHG hōhan, MHG hāhen, MLG hān, MDu hāen represented the O1cut reduplicating vb with consonant-exchange (grammatischer Wechsel) hahan from earlier haghan*, hohāh (pl hohagun, hohgan, in Gothic, hāhan, haihāh, haihōhun hāhun- (levelled under the present tense form In WGer and Norse, the pa. t had the type hōng, Os heng, OHG hōng, MHG hāng, Got hāh, ON hekk pl hengu OE hēng, hēng. ME hen, hang, heyng, hung. The pa. pple hangen also varied in OE and ME. with hongen (as in lang, long, etc.) Already in ON the present stem hēh- had been ousted by the weak form hangra, and in the Middle period a similar change took place in all the WGer langs. ME has hēhen hangen, hēn, hangen, ME. hōn, hangen (hongen). This identified the old trans vb with the intr hangian, hongian, so that both had now for the pres t hang (hong), in consequence of which the strong pa t and pa pple heng (hung), hangen (hongen), and the weak forms, hangede (hongede), -ed, became also generally confounded in sense, and (with some exceptions) used indiscriminately. Meanwhile the ON causal verb hengja came into northern Eng as heng, e. also (with long change of -eŋ to -iŋ), hing, at first app. with weak inflexion and trans sense, hengde, henged, hingde, hinged, but soon, by assimilation to the 3rd ablaut class of str verbs, with a pa t hang, varying in north midl with hong, both trans and intr At this period (13-15th c.), therefore, while the south had pres t hang, hong, and pa. heng, hing, the north had conversely pres heng, hing, pa hang, hong Finally the northern inflexion hang, hong, was completed by the pa pple hung, which in the 16th c. penetrated into general Eng., where arose a new pa t hung (like sung, sang, sung, in presence of which the earlier heng, hing, and hong became obs The weak inflexion hanged however continued in use (being the only one used in Bible versions from Coverdale to 1611, though I imitate had also hanne, ; but was gradually superseded by hung in the general sense, trans and intr leaving hanged only in the special trans sense (3), 'put to death by hanging', owing prob to the retention of this archaic form by judges in pronouncing capital sentences The distinction is found chiefly in Bible versions from Coverdale to 1611, in the subjunctive expressions 'You be hanged!' 'I'll be hanged if I do', and the like Nevertheless southern speakers and writers still often say 'the man was hung' instead of 'hanged' In the northern dialects, on the other hand, the distinction runs all through the verb, the special sense 'put to death by hanging' being expressed by hang, hangd, hangt, of which the present tense is hing, hing hun, a. the present tense heng extends into N England as far south as Northamptonshire see A 1 e quot 1821 In those dialects, therefore, heng and hang are distinct verbs, differing both in sense and inflexion, but in Standard English, the re being only the single form hang for the present tense, it is necessary to treat all the verb together (Hang is parallel in inflexion to Ban v.)

The distinction of trans and intr has always tended to break down The strong verb was orig trans in WGer and in OE., hangian being the intr but in ON., hengja, hōha, hangra were intr, and the causal hengja trans., hengra is only trans in Orm, but Cursor M. and Hampole have hang both trans and intr, like the contemporary southern hang, hong Cf also mod Ger, in which the true intr hangen is archaic, and ordinarily superseded by the trans hängen, though the pa tenses hing and hin, h trans. remain distinct in use.]

See the discussion of the word in Gross, The Gild Merchant I Appendix C. The following two main senses may be distinguished, but the order of their appearance in Eng. is not clear]

1 The early type of portable gun, varying in size from a small cannon to a musket, which on account of its weight was, when used in the field, supported upon a tripod, trestle, or other 'carriage', and after wards upon a forked 'rest'. The name in German and Flemish meant literally 'hook-gun', from the hook cast along with the piece, by which it was fastened to the 'carriage', but the name became generic for portable fire-arms generally in the 16th century, so that the type with the hook was subsequently distinguished as arquebus à croc. see 2

According to Wendelin Boeheim, Handbuch der Waffen kunde (Leipzig 1890) 447, 455, the hook of the original hakenbüchse was intended to hold on to a wall or other fixed object partly to support the weight of the barrel and partly to diminish the recoil. Maximilian I (early 16th cent.) introduced the portable tripod which could be put together in the field. The forked rest came in about 1520, with the Spanish musket.
